

CDDW™ and CLM 2023 joint planning is underway!

The Canadian Association of Gastroenterology and the Canadian Association for the Study of the Liver renew partnership for annual conferences

EDMONTON, AB and OAKVILLE, ON – (June 24, 2022) – The Canadian Association of Gastroenterology (CAG) and the Canadian Association for the Study of the Liver (CASL) are excited to announce a renewed partnership for the joint 2023 Canadian Digestive Diseases Week™ (CDDW™) and Canadian Liver Meeting (CLM).

With the CAG hosting CDDW™ and the CASL hosting CLM, the two conferences will be running concurrently with various session crossovers. The conferences will take place from February 27 to March 5, 2023. More details regarding the programming of CDDW™ and CLM will be announced later this year. In addition, stay tuned for more announcements regarding an exciting new location and venue.

“After a few years apart, I am more than pleased to announce that CDDW and CLM will be working closely again for the benefit of our mutual and respective members,” says Dr. Paul Moayyedi, President of the CAG. “We are confident that next year’s event will prove to be a great partnership between the CAG and CASL, and I am certainly looking forward to seeing everyone in person again.”

“Both CDDW™ and the Canadian Liver Meeting are successful conferences, and we are thrilled to bring them under a single roof for the 2023 meeting. The renewed partnership between CASL and the CAG will truly advance the goals of both our organizations and open doors to increased opportunities for research collaboration, improved patient care, and better training for the next generation of specialist physicians,” says Dr. Mark Swain, CASL President.

Joint planning for both conferences is currently underway. Over the next few weeks and months, members can look forward to seeing new updates and full programming schedules for both conferences, as well as a new registration portal and informative website. Delegates can look forward to attending one, or both conferences, and there will be programming from other affiliated organizations as well. CAG and CASL look forward to hosting members at next year’s joint CDDW™-CLM conferences!

About the Canadian Association of Gastroenterology

The Canadian Association of Gastroenterology (CAG), founded in 1962, supports and engages in the study of the organs of the digestive tract in health and disease. The association promotes the advancement of the science and art of gastroenterology by providing national leadership in patient care, research, teaching and continuing professional development.

About the Canadian Association for the Study of the Liver

CASL is a non-profit organization that seeks to eliminate liver disease through research, education, and advocacy. Its members include hepatologists, gastroenterologists, pathologists, pediatricians, radiologists, scientists, surgeons, trainees, and other interested people.

For media inquiries, please contact:

Rakhee Neebar,
Communications Coordinator
Canadian Association of Gastroenterology
rakhee@cag-acg.org

Maureen Melnyk,
Association Manager
Canadian Association of the Liver
casl@hepatology.ca